Dear Ms. Hesse:

I am writing to express my opinion regarding the Microsoft anti-trust case settlement recently proposed by the Bush administration.

I believe that if the court wishes to act in the best interests of all Americans, it will approve the settlement, end this case and allow Microsoft and the American tech industry to move forward unencumbered by ongoing litigation. Continuing to pursue this matter in court is a waste of precious time and energy and sets a very bad precedent for undue government interference in private business. Even under the terms of the settlement, Microsoft will be operating under a level of scrutiny that I feel is unnecessary given the facts of the case. However, I believe that the Bush settlement offers our best hope for moving onward and upward, and I urge the court to accept that settlement.

Best regards,
